Washington, Oct. 6 .- An exhibit de voted to forest windbreak planting the preservative treatment of fari timbers, and the administration of the national forests in their relation to the farmers of the west has been pre pared for the International Soil Proets exposition at El Paso, Tex., Oc

The central feature of the display is a miniature growing windbreak made of young trees of the various species suited for windbreak plantin in the southwest and properly spaced, in they would be in a full-grown shel-ter belt. Daily demonstrations of the preper manner of trees planting will be given at this exhibit.

Two models of 160-acre farms, one in the north and one in the south, show the proper location and composition of windbreaks. The shelter afforted by rows and groves of the proper kinds of trees upon farms in the subhumid regions of the United States is most important in the conomics of the farming in these regions. Crops and livestock will thrive better and the homestead will be more comfortable if sheltered from the drying winds of summer and the vaill-ing winds of winter by well placed windbreaks. It is important, how-ever, that the right speckes be select-ed, that they be spaced properly and bandled wisely. Information conserning these matters is given harts showing prevailing winds during the growing season in various re-gions, and, in 'Ten Rules for Windstereoptican views of windbreaks and of independents tomorrow afternoon windbreak handling will also be An old time "home interest" debate
